

ABSTRACT

Methods are disclosed for determining the activity and function of gene products based on their change to the phenotype of cells when contacted with a surrogate molecule identified through screening of a recombinant peptide library. By identifying peptides which bind gene products for which the function is not yet known, tools are provided for determining their function and obtaining drug candidates.

10

15

20

25

30

35